

Hentie van der Merwe

Biography

Born in Windhoek, Namibia in 1972. Lives and works in Cape Town, South Africa

Artist Statement

At the core of much of Hentie van der Merwe's work is the body: its power, vulnerability, sexuality, objectification; its memory and its concealment; its capacity for violence or intimacy; the body as it exists or is represented publicly and privately, symbolically and commercially. And central to his process is a rummaging through archives from which he roots out details: reflections on predominantly the masculine body, followed by the recontextualisation of that which is uncovered. Van der Merwe's work also engages a biographical perspective: exploring his own relationship to his historical context, having grown up in an Afrikaans family in then South West Africa, and the perceptions of (assumed/prescribed) masculinity that accompanied that cultural environment." (Tracy Murinik in Ten Years, 100 Artists, 2004)

In my work there is an ongoing interest in the body, particularly the male body, in relation to the archive. The archive as that which defines the body, both as a political and sexual being. The archive then becomes the site where these terms by which the body gets defined are investigated, challenged, interrogated – not in order to escape these terms, but to redefine them – in the hope of opening up the possibilities for a different way of experiencing emotions and feelings, both public and private.

My current project is a collaborative project for the stage. A music-theatre work based on the remarkable exchange of letters between the Nama leader, Hendrik Witbooi, and the German Colonial Officer Theodor Leutwein at the turn of the nineteenth century in German South-West Africa. The work combines excerpts from this historical exchange with that from audio-recordings of Nama folktales from the extraordinary archive of the German folklorist Sigrid Schmidt.
